The Global Financial Crisis (GFC) and its regional implications and responses

This round table is about the usefulness of Regional Science in dealing with the world economic and financial crisis and its impacts on regional development.

Three important questions will be addressed:

- What have been the regional impacts of the GFC in different countries as Australia, France, Italy, Switzerland, USA? ?
- To what extent public policy responses to the GFC had an explicit regional component or focus?
- Have regional science analysis been used to enhance public policy responses, and especially to promote regional innovation, creativity and development in response to the GFC?

These questions will be raised at the round table by each of the panel members to highlight what has happened in their countries and what they think should have been done to improve responses to the GFC.
